Providing relief from the intense heat of summer, the monsoons are celebrated throughout the Indian subcontinent. This joy finds its resonance in Hindustani classical music as well. The Archive of North Indian Classical Music at the School of Cultural Texts and Records, Jadavpur University, Kolkata, is curating a listening session in celebration of the monsoons, where the archive will present representative audio artefacts from its collection.

This curated experience will provide a unique experience of engaging with the digitised audio tracks, and will be supplemented with corresponding information on individual entries.
