Dularia is a project that empowers socio-economically challenged indigenous tribal communities in West Bengal, helping them to gain livelihood through nature-friendly practices. The word Dularia means ‘created through love’ in the Santhali tribal language. The project’s vision is to be a 100% community-led, financially self-sufficient enterprise. Dularia also aspires to be an education centre where local tribal communities and people from around the world can learn about mindful connection with nature, biomimicry, and regenerative techniques of permaculture, natural farming, natural building, traditional herbal medicine, and upcycling of waste materials. At this session, the unique story of Dularia will be brought alive by its makers themselves.
